

Can you deliver justice?

District Crown Prosecutors

Are you a talented lawyer with management experience? The Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) are looking for District Crown Prosecutors to join our dynamic workforce across England and Wales.

At the Crown Prosecution Service, we are responsible for delivering justice through the independent and effective prosecution of crime. As the principal prosecuting authority across England and Wales the nature and diversity of cases we advise on and prosecute means our work is often emotionally challenging and complex. As such we employ almost 6,000 individuals who think objectively, act professionally, show the upmost respect for others and continually strive for excellence.

As District Crown Prosecutor, you will also contribute to strategic planning and policy making, provide best practice training for your own team or those outside it and work collaboratively with other parts of the criminal justice system and external organisations to improve conviction rates and public confidence.

An inspirational manager, you will lead a team of prosecutors, advising on escalated cases and offering expert guidance to secure as many successful prosecutions as possible. The role involves frequent prioritising and making decisions under pressure, so it's essential you can remain calm, think clearly and multitask.

Delivering justice is a complex pursuit with work that is sometimes emotionally challenging, which is why we offer a range of benefits including flexible working, civil service pension scheme, access to employee savings including high street retailer offers and discounts and 25 days leave, rising to 30 days after 5 years' service.

If you are committed to public service and are looking for a role at the very forefront of delivering justice, find out more and apply now at <https://www.cps.gov.uk/careers-cps>.
